The Root Language Concordance for FW

The search for Joyce's Root Language has led after several false starts to this volume which allows the reader to find the close relatives of any given word in close proximity. The pattern of connections was best shown when the formula DuBLiN was used as a basis, while bearing in mind that D=T, B=P and M=N in Joyce's "Root Language". These along with L are the four major landmarks in any word, and the minor consonants can be similarly pared down to the sounds of S, J, K (Q or X), R and F (Ph or V). A short acquaintance with the Wake shows that the vowel sounds are irrelevant: Michael for example can be represented by Makal, Makeall, Meckle, Mickil or Moykill. And a similar argument disposes of H, Y and W.

The Viconian idea that the heavenly language of thunder was that of the Gods stammering is found early in the Wake with the first of the hundred letter words "bababadalgharaghta..." which is later shown to be a version of "Both all characters...". Any word then with a repetition of letters may be reduced to its essentials. By this method it can be established that "Milkinghoneybeaver-brooker" is a very elaborate version, with stammers and interruptions by minor consonants, of Marlborough or Malbruk.

Clive Hart's "Concordance" is the single most useful tool for anyone interested in FW. It need hardly be said that this new concordance is not an effort to supplant it, but rather will be a helpful companion volume, an extension of his section called Overtones, designed in such a fashion that readers will find the actual words in their logical order rather than alphabetically. Clive Hart agrees that this new method constitutes a useful tool, and adds that he had considered such an option himself.

The Principles.

This will appear complicated at first reading, but after a little use the underlying logic will become second nature. Since the RL system is non-alphabetic the order of the primary consonants in the key word DuBLiN has been deliberately maintained. The Concordance falls into five sections: four groups of words headed by each of the majors, and one of words without a major consonant. The D,B,L and N sections are subdivided into words with one, two, three or four major consonants: e.g. D: DB: DBL, DBN: DBLN, and DBNL. Each section has its attendant stammers.

1. The first group of words consists of D with various prefixes and suffixes. The basic principle has been adopted that words are primarily recognised by their first letters, and secondarily by their endings. Suffixes will be presented first since prefixes change the primary recognition factor.

The simplest expansion is an added vowel sound after the D, as in "dough" or "tea", both of which may be encoded simply as D-. The vowel sounds are listed for the sake of consistency in the order given in Webster's Dictionary. They are pronounced as in these words: ale, care, add, account, arm, sofa; eve, here, event, end, silent, maker; ice, ill, charity; old, obey, orb, odd, soft, connect; food, foot, out, oil; cube, unite, urn, up, circus, menu. In practice I have taken any schwa to be that of sofa. The presence of h, w and y is not of sufficient force to be taken as a signpost in words with major consonants, but becomes important in words without them.

D- is further expanded by new terminations resulting from the addition of the minor consonants in the order s, j, k, r, and f. These may occur alone or in combination. Thus D-s ("tease") is followed by D-s-("teaser"), D-s-j ("discharge"), D-sk ("task"), D-skr- ("descry") and D-sk-f- ("discover"); obviously there will not be examples of all the possibilities. Each possibility can be expanded by the interruption of a vowel sound or a minor consonant in the "wrong" order; in the latter case the word is analysed according to its ranking in the sjkrf order, thus Dsfr is placed after Dsj, Dsk and Dsr words. Another variation is the stammer (s-s, k-k) which, unless common enough to form a subclass of its own, is generally treated as if the letter were unstammered.

The next section contains all the stammers of D and their variations beginning with D-D and D-D- and running through the gamut of sjkrf at the end of each word as before, then continuing with the interruptions from DsD to DfD, each with a set of terminations.

The other possibility for a single major consonant results from vowel sound or minor consonants occurring at the beginning of the word: -D ("add"), -sD ("east"), -s-D ("acid") etc., each of which in turn can be expanded by an ending: -D- ("adder"), -sD- ("hasty"), -s-D-s ("Acetius") etc. Since the start of the word is the primary factor -D and all its variants are listed before -sD with its possible endings. The section for the stammers of -D-D follows that for -D.

2. More complicated words begin with those having two major consonants. DB is offered as an example.

The simplest form is the interruption of DB by a vowel: D-B ("top"). The next possibility is D-B- ("toper") with another vowel syllable at the end. The range broadens with the addition of the minor consonants at the end in their order: s, j, k, r and f. Each of the minor consonants may have a set of its own. These words can be symbolised as D-B, D-B-, D-Bs, D-B-s. D-B-s- (j,k,r,f); "top", "toper", "tabs", "dieybos", "tapizo", "tabbage", "Taboccoo", "turbary" and "dapifer".

The next set consists of words interrupted by one or more minor consonants. They are symbolised as DsB, Ds-B, D-s-B, DsB- etc. followed by DjB and its set, DkB and so forth. Each of these can have a full set of endings as before.

The simplest form of any word is the one which has the consonants together at the beginning. For example DBs would be listed before DB-s, and DB-s before D-Bs, or less hypothetically sDB before sD-B, and s-DB or s-D-B (stp, stap,, sweetharp).

3. Stammers:

a) Major Consonants.

A stammer may be interrupted by vowels or minor consonants. There are three versions of the basic pair. The simplest is of the overall form DDB ("towertop"). Usually words of the form DDBB will be included in the DDB category, unless they are very numerous, but there will be a separate category for DBB ("deepseep"). The second version is of the form DBD ("dabbed") and the third of the form DBDB ("deepdeep").

b) Minor consonants.

The stammer is never interrupted as is the case with major consonants, for example words like s-k-s and s-kr-s are always reported in full. In cases where the stammer occurs with only a vowel separation as in s-s or k-k it is often read as if there was but a single s or k especially if there is but one example. Where there are three or more they are usually put in a separate category following the plain letter; this is commonly found in the larger word groups e.g. ND or DN.

4. Three or more Major Consonants.

DB now gives rise to DBL and DBN which in turn lead to DBLN and DBNL. The same rules apply for the addition of minor consonants as given in the first section.

Stammers involving three or four consonants raise fresh complications. The usual rules apply in the case of DBL for example: the stammers are listed in the order DDBL ("tidetable") (with DDBBL ("Doddpebble") etc.); then DBBL ("tripupcables") along with DBBLL of which there are no examples; and finally DBLL ("topplefouls"). Next follow the stammers caused by the addition of a consonant to the end: DBLD ("tabled") (with DBLDB, DBLDL ("terriblital"), DBLB ("thubulbs") etc. with priority given in each case to the first letter of the original three, followed by the second. Next are the stammers caused by interruption of the DBL: DBDL ("tubtail"), DBDBL ("toptypical") etc., and finally the macro-stammer DBLDBL ("doubledouble" is a hypothetical example). These categories are seldom filled but the order is preserved.

The case of four major consonants is more elaborate, but the use of the same priorities makes order out of chaos. First the letters are stammered in their correct order, then there are additions to the end, interruptions and finally macro stammers. The basic principle must be observed that stammers are categorised from beginning of the word not from its end.

5. Words which do not begin with a major consonant.

These are listed in six groups in each consonant section, those beginning with a vowel including examples with h, w and y, then those with an s, j, k, r, or f. Each of these headings will include combinations such as words beginning with skr (including s-kr, sk-r etc) which will be found in the s section, and fr in the f section.

6. Words which do not have any major consonant.

In the case of words with only minor consonants or no consonants at all the rules become more liberal. Now the hitherto disregarded letters h, w and y gain recognition as they govern syllabification especially in words without minor consonants. Stammers of sjkrf are not listed with separate headings as with major consonants but they are usually differentiated from those in which the letters occur undoubled.

7. Words which have a silent consonant are listed without it, for example palm is taken as B-N. The French N though barely present to an English speaker has been allowed to stand.

8. Pronunciation: It is hardly necessary to point out that this is a matter for debate. When I was given the privilege of making the first complete recording of the Wake for the Library of Congress in 1983, it became a subject of some considerable study for me. Joyce in recording the Washerwomen passage (pp 213-16) managed to straddle the line between what the eye sees and what the brain demands, a tactic I have tried to follow. In some cases it is impossible to decide which pronunciation is best. Though Joyce recommended reading the work aloud, he should perhaps have added "several times" in order to grasp the multiplicity of sometimes contradictory meanings. A good example of this equivocality is the word "Wakeschrift" (205.17). It might be, in a context of Misericordia, that the Wake needs the shrift of confession and penance. Or is this a German book (Schrift) about the Wake, and would that imply a "German" reading as a "fake" or "vague" piece of writing, or even one that is absent, "weg"? It is not always certain whether a foreign word should be pronounced as if in the appropriate language. Some German words with w have been pronounced with a v; but Scandinavian sk has been accepted as English sk. By and large words which have a foreign pronunciation eliminating letters which are sounded in English are listed as properly pronounced. This is common in French and Irish. Some few cases are hard to define and have been double entered: for example Irish gh is inconstant, and ogham has been entered with both pronunciations. The Welsh Ll raises problems as Clive Hart has pointed out to me. It ought not to be pronounced kl, it is much more like hl. On balance I feel that Joyce wanted both versions because the Welsh word for an ash tree is lluddw which offered a bridge to cloud, clod and Cliath. The English letter T though variable in pronunciation is always listed as D.

9. Words which occur in the Wake more than once are marked as frequent with the letter f after the line attribution. Hart's Concordance must be consulted for the additional addresses.

10. Words of a shape which occurs only once or twice are listed under the heading of their closest relative. When they are more frequent they may be listed in separate categories.

11. There are four passages in the Wake for which I have given line references which accord with the popular edition now in use in the United States. On the other hand Hart's Concordance gives references corresponding to the emended version of the first trade edition. Discrepancies occur on pp 066-7 where the original 37 line p. 066 has been regularized in the Viking-Penguin text; on p.176 where "Hely Baba and the Forty Thieves" has been dropped from line 2 with adjustments down to line 13; on p.248 where the words "Blanche", "Awabeg", "cipher" and "na" on lines 33-5 have each been placed on the preceding line; and p.547 from line 9 onwards where the word "lors" is now by itself on line 9 and the gap at line 13 is gone. All references from that point on are now one line later. In the case of the missing line on p 605 only the word "domination" does not already occur somewhere in the Wake, and I have restored it. In the course of checking my text for accuracy some few errata were found in Hart's Concordance which have been silently emended.

Method of production.

In this era of computer technology it was hoped that the process of sorting words might be speeded up in some way, but the possible solution of listing them in a rapid file field like addresses does not help very much since the machine cannot deduce the order in a non-alphabetical way. Possibly an expert could come up with some way to express the words in a sortable way, perhaps using numbers to represent the vowel sounds, but there was the basic difficulty that to commence with I had only a general idea about the way to do the sorting. The answer chosen was the old fashioned cards on the kitchen table method, which was good enough for the editors of the OED, not to mention Clive Hart himself.

All words were written down on file cards from the Hart Concordance, and rechecked for accuracy after each page of work. Each word was entered with its line reference, its RL code structure and the symbol S if it was found to be a stammer example of one of the major consonants. The words were then sorted into categories, which revealed themselves as the work progressed.

Certain blind alleys were explored and eliminated, for instance the possibilities that W = V (sometimes it does of course), and that L and R were equivalent, were abandoned early on. The separation of the minor consonants s, j and k was harder to achieve.

After many re-sortings the words were entered into a computer in their possible order, and this list was checked and reworked in turn. Finally every entry was checked against a copy of the Wake to eliminate errors on my part and a very few of Mr Hart's.

Method of use.

The search word must first of all be encoded in the RL system: a simple example is "ashpit", which is encoded as -sB-D and therefore will be found early on in the s section of BD. It turns out that there are quite a few close relatives which would not be revealed in an alphabetical list including husboat and Houseboat, which are "husband" words. There is therefore a curious link between the famous midden and HCE. Greater complication is offered by "Catheringnettes": the paired N's become just one N and the word encodes as k-D-r-N-Ds. This is a stammer in the kDN section which will follow the -DN, sDN and jDN groups. Since the stammer is of the form DND it will follow DDN and DNN. Even more elaborate are the hundred letter words, but they can be analysed quite simply. Here is the first one: "bababadalgharaghtakamminarronkonbronntonerronntuonnthunn-trovarrhounawnskawntooohooordenenthurnuk"

Encoded it becomes B-B-B-D-Lk-r-kD-k-N-N-r-N...etc. Since no word in the RL system can have more than four major consonants there is no need to continue the process. Reading off the majors from the beginning of the word shows that it will be found among the stammers of BDLN. Another stammer close by has a rather similar shape: Bothallchoractorschumminaround...turnup".

Though words of the form D-L and -D-L have separate listings it is necessary to consult both pages since there is an obvious relationship between Toole and O'Toole. It is necessary to cast the net a little wider than the immediate vicinity, because Joyce gave himself considerable latitude in his punmanship.

Hart's Overtones are very useful in finding bridges between related words which do not have a close Root Language tie. Those words in turn should be checked for their RL affinities.
